

FOR THE LADIES.

Miss Fanny Davenport Explains the Method by Which She Retains Her Health.

The Changes in the Fashion of Feminine Shoulders in the Last Century.

A Tyrolean Custom. The Story of Hannah Snell, Soldier and Sailor—A Man's Idea of Women.

Considerable curiosity has been manifested concerning the method Miss Fanny Davenport pursued to get rid of the superabundant flesh she acquired some years ago and reduce her figure to the trim proportion that has distinguished her of late; in view of which the following communication from the popular actress will be read with interest:

"In regard to my figure, it is so long since I have done aught to retain its proportions but talking plenty of exercise and eating no vegetables, that I almost forgot the severe measures I took to reduce some six or seven years ago. But I believe one's amount of flesh is a disease, and only overcome by strong will and determination—no sweets, no beer, no potatoes, no bread, no butter. My method is now, a cup of coffee when I wake, say at 9:30, then at 10:30 I row on my rowing machine some 300 strokes—sometimes more, sometimes less, as I happen to feel; then I get into a warm bath, then an ice-cold plunge, rub well, dress and eat my breakfast at 11:30. Then I either ride or walk from six to eight hours; if raining I row again during the day for an hour. I have a diet of roast beef, dry toast, and perhaps some soup or fish at 4:30. After the theater I eat a light supper, drink a pint of wine—very dry brandy—till about an hour, then to bed. I believe regularity in living is health, and I never vary. I find physical exercise counteracts the brain weariness. You will hardly believe that I have been acting 'Tosca' for fifty-seven weeks with but four weeks' rest during that time, have traveled as far west as Denver, as far east as Boston, as far north as Portland, Oregon, and as far south as San Diego, Cal., in that time. I am well in mind and body, and though 35 this month feel 25. In regard to my marriage, I hope kind heaven will add to all my other blessings by bestowing upon me a good man's love, in which there is both rest and peace from the world and its cares."

The Story of Hannah Snell.

Hannah Snell flourished in the reign of George II. Her grandfather was a soldier who fought with Malplaquet; she married early, her husband being a Dutch sailor, who maltreated and deserted her, leaving her with a baby, which died, whereupon Hannah appropriated a suit of her brother-in-law's clothes, and assuming his name, which was Thomas Grey, enlisted in Gen. Gurney's regiment. After while she deserted, but subsequently enlisted in the navy as a marine, in which capacity she served in the East Indies, and by her dexterity in washing and mending for the men, and from her being headless, she acquired the name of "Molly," but her bravery in action eventually caused her to be invested with the more honorable cognomen of "Molly Jenney."

Being at last discharged from the service during all this time her sex was undiscovered, Hannah Snell went on the stage, and appeared with much applause as Bill Bobstay, a sailor, and as Firelock, a grenadier. In consideration of the hardships she had undergone in the East Indies, and the tribulations, 500 lashes that she got at the halibuts, and an almost equally barbarous scourging at the same way on board ship, the government awarded Hannah a pension of £20 ($100) a year, on the strength of which she took a public house in London, with the appropriate sign of "The Widow in Masquerade; or, the Female Warrior."

A Tyrolean Custom.

London Figure: In some parts of the Tyrol a peculiar and beautiful custom prevails among the peasantry. When a peasant girl is going to be married, before she leaves her home to go to the church, her mother gives her a handkerchief, which is called the "tear handkerchief." It is made of newly spun linen and has never been used. She is supposed to dry her tears with this when she leaves her home, and when she stands at the altar. After the marriage is over, and the bride has gone with her husband to her new home, she carefully folds up the handkerchief and places it unwashed among her little treasures. So far it has done half its duty. Her children grow up, marry and go away to new homes, each daughter receiving in her turn a new "tear handkerchief," and yet the last present, the present received from her mother, has not fulfilled its object. Years roll by, and the once young and blooming bride becomes a wrinkled old woman, and has outlived, perhaps, her husband and all her children. At last, when the weary eyelids are closed forever, the "tear handkerchief" is taken from its resting-place and spread over the placid, dead face.

The Century's Change in Women.

New York Letter: Of all the changes which have taken place in the hundred years of the life of the republic, one which is very marked is never spoken of—the revolution in the fashionable shape of women's shoulders. Look at Blythe's portrait of Mrs. John Adams, painted when she was twenty-two, the one with the triple string of pearls about the throat. The shoulders are curved downward in full oval. Girls in her day were trained to let their arms hang pendant, to depress the shoulders and to pose head high up on a swanlike neck. Look at the painting of Lady Kitty Duer, the friend of Mrs. John Jay and one of the belles of the first immigration ball. The points of her shoulders drop downward until the line of the arms seems only a continuation of the line of neck and shoulders. Look at Mrs. John Jay herself, the wonderful American beauty, who looked so much like Marie Antoinette that the audience in a Paris theatre once rose to their feet to do her royal honor. She had sloping shoulders, and so had, pretty Mrs. James Beckwith, who served as client Washington with lemonade gathered in his presence from her own lemon trees. Could you find a sloping shoulder to-day? Fashion no longer enforces the long-drooping line elegant or beautiful, and fashion, within a comparatively recent period, has evolved, by accretion and development, a full, square, high shouldered, bigger framed, smacking of the gymnasium, which is the present ideal. Square shoulders are almost universal.

Where Woman Exerts Mobile Heister: When a woman has a hen to drive into the coop, she takes hold of her skirts with both hands, shakes them quietly at the delinquent and says: "Shoo, there!" The hen takes one look at the object to assure herself that it is a woman, and then stalks majestically into the coop. A man doesn't do that. He goes out into the outdoors, saying: "It's singular nobody can drive a hen but me!" and picking up a stick of wood hurls it at the offending bird and yells: "Get in there, you thief!" The hen immediately loses her reason and dashes to the other end of the yard. The man plunges after her. She comes back with her head down, her wings out and followed by a miscellaneous assortment of stowwood, fruit cans, clinkers, and a very mad man in the rear.

Then she skims under the barn and over a fence or two and around the house back to the coop again, all the while talking as only an excited hen can talk, and all the while followed by things convenient for throwing, and by a man whose coat is on the sawbuck, whose hat is on the ground and whose perspiration is limitless. By this time the other hens have come out to take a hand in the debate and help dodge missiles. The man vows that every hen on the place shall be sold at once, puts on his hat and coat and goes down town. The woman comes out, goes right to work and has every one of those hens housed and counted inside of two minutes.

The Handsome Club.

New York World: The Handsome Club, of this city, whose membership is said to be made up entirely of women distinguished for beauty of face and form, will give a dinner within a very short time at some popular hotel, but the name of the hotel and the date of the dinner is carefully withheld. The consequence is that a great deal of excitement concerning the affair is current, and all manner of ingenious devices have been resorted to for the securing of information on the subject. The Handsome Club numbers 184 members and is a branch of a parent organization in Washington, whose mission on earth it is to raise money for the education of the negro children in the south, and for the careful charitable care of negro women. The dues are $2 a month and the money derived from this source is regularly sent to the destination indicated. The Handsome Club has a very handsome club house on Sutton place, which overlooks the East river, where the women of the club meet. Miss Clifford, a very beautiful girl, is president of the organization.

One Man's Idea of Women.

Mr. Grant Allen propounds in the Forum a new view of "Woman's Place in Nature." "The males," he says, "are the race; the females are merely the sex to do the work and produce it. All that is distinctively human is man; the field, the ship, the mine, the workshop; all that is truly woman is merely reproductive; the home, the nursery, the school room." "This very necessary distinction of sex, which is a considerable number of the women for the arduous duties of human maternity, prevents the possibility of woman's being as distinguished as man during that time, have traveled as far west as Denver, as far east as Boston, as far north as Portland, Oregon, and as far south as San Diego, Cal., in that time. I am well in mind and body, and though 35 this month feel 25. In regard to my marriage, I hope kind heaven will add to all my other blessings by bestowing upon me a good man's love, in which there is both rest and peace from the world and its cares."

The Queen of Siam.

The Queen of Siam, writes F. G. Carpenter, is not far from 20 years of age; she rules the harem and she is a very pretty Siamese girl. Her complexion is a light brown and her hair, which is about two inches long, stands straight up and is combed backward from a fair open forehead. She has beautiful eyes, wears diamond earrings and a diamond pendant at her neck and her fingers are encircled with precious stones. She smokes cigarettes, as does also the king, and she chews the betel nut, making her teeth as black as jet and the betel stick out. The Siamese say that any dog can have white teeth, but that it is only those who are rich enough to afford the betel nut who can have black ones. All the ladies are a sign of beauty here, and all the ladies of the harem chew and smoke.

HOME TESTIMONY.

HELENA, Oct. 7, 1887. I was suffering from an unusually bad cough, my lungs were sore and congested, and I consulted one of the best physicians in Helena, whose prescriptions failed to relieve me. I became alarmed, and at the suggestion of a friend purchased a bottle of Dr. Kirk's English Remedy for coughs, and after taking it according to directions was completely cured. I therefore cheerfully recommend it. I had a racking cough and inflamed throat and bought a bottle of Dr. Kirk's English Remedy upon the recommendation of a friend, and was entirely cured by it. I consider it a never failing remedy for a cough. Dr. Kirk's English Remedy is for sale in Helena only by R. S. Hale & Co.
